

this and that

This and That is an award-winning collectible design atelier that retells the story of Indian craft through contemporary furniture, fabric and beyond. Based in the design capital of Ahmedabad, principal designer Ariane Thakore Ginwala opens the door to both the history and future of India's design vernacular, one collection at a time.

Design can be a powerful tool in the hands of craft, transforming not just objects but the communities that make them. What started as a challenge to the perception of their work, now inspires our artisans to dream beyond. Our aim is to not just preserve traditional craft, but reimagine it — in scale, function, form and concept.

‘The only thing we love more than the traditional is creating something timeless with it. We travel far and deep, collecting objects and ideas that inspire stories. In the process, we unearth memories, both that have passed and those yet to be made.’

Breathing life into found objects is more than just fixing it. We have a deep respect for craftsmanship, and every Ekatva piece is a collaboration between the hands that made the original and those that transform it. Sometimes objects live in our workshop for years, finding their way into the collection only when a worthy idea strikes. .

The image shows a perspective view down a hallway in a building that appears to be in a state of disrepair. On the left, a large, fluted classical column with a decorative capital stands prominently. In the background, another similar column is visible. The walls are a light, mottled color, possibly plaster or concrete, showing signs of aging and wear. Two arched doorways are visible: one in the distance with a wooden door, and a larger one on the right with a wooden door featuring vertical bars. The floor is covered in a patterned tile, possibly a checkered or geometric design. A small red object, possibly a flower or a piece of trash, lies on the floor in the middle ground. The overall lighting is soft and somewhat dim, creating a somber and historical atmosphere.
